RED AND WHITE TEAM HITS STRIDE, SMOTHERING M.A.A.A. TO TUNE OF 10-3 DOONER WAS EFFECTIVE IN THE NETS

Whole Line-up Played Great Game and All Deserve Praise—Dineen and Dawes in Good Condition—Defence Was a Stonewall One—Gallery Notched Three—Little Rough Work Indulged in—Loyola Overwhelmed Shamrocks in First Game.

Last evening the McGill team went over the top with their first victory. At no time was the issue of the game at stake. Both teams showed some rather brilliant plays but from the very start the Red and White had the edge on their opponents. The defence was very effective in checking rush after rush by the M. A. A. A. defence, strengthened by "Dud" Ross, who made his first appearance with the Winged Wheelers. The forward line also showed the effect of Hyland's coaching, and the combination was much improved. It was evident, however, with a very few exceptions, that both teams were not in the best of condition and, no doubt, a more speedy brand of hockey will result with more steady practice.

Behan, as usual, played an all-star game. His clever stick-handling brought him cheer after cheer from the crowd of supporters. Dineen and Dawes also showed lots of speed, the former tallying two and Dawes three. Heney played almost the whole game, and his brilliant work on the defence, no doubt, was responsible for the small number of goals scored by the M.A.A.A. Dooner, in the nets, was not below his usual high standard and stopped many a difficult one.

Hardly had the whistle blown than Gallery, after a brilliant bit of combination work by Behan, scored. After the whistle blew the puck went to M.A.A.A., but after several ineffective rushes, Behan secured it and, dodging the whole opposing team, tallied. Then followed a period in which both teams made several good rushes, but clever work on the part of the men in nets saved both. After a rush by Ross, Dawes secured and taking a long shot from the side bagged another.

Hardly had the whistle blown than Dawes scored another, followed by a third from Cully, who rushed in from the side. Just before time Suckling put one in on a long shot.

In the second period Dineen was the nucleus around which the plays centered, and after stopping a furious rush by an M.A.A.A. defence man he skated through their entire defence and tallied. In this period substitutes were used to good advantage, several times there being no regulars on the ice.

During the third period the pace slackened, both teams showing the effect of strenuous playing. Dineen again scored for McGill, after the goal tender had been drawn out by Gallery. Behan did some good work during this period, but was unable to score. Blumenthal succeeded in putting one past Dooner towards the finish, the final score being 10-3 in favor of the Red and White.

The line-ups were as follows:

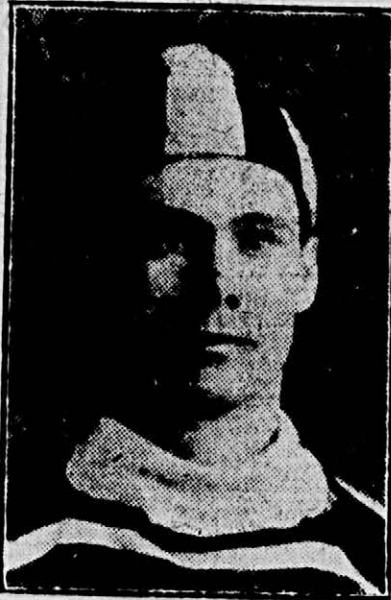

McGill.	M.A.A.A.
Dooner . . . . . Goal . . . . . Blumenthal
Heney . . . . . Defence . . . . . Sergeant
Cully . . . . . Defence . . . . . Gillard

Dineen . . . . . Forward . . . . . Barlow
Subs.—McGill, Dawes, Lyall, McGillis, Kramer, Notman, Nichol; M. A. A. A., Suckling, Bussiere, Darling.

In the first game Loyola showed their superiority from the start by defeating Shamrocks to a tune of 12-1. At no time during the three periods did the Shamrocks have any chance against their faster opponents and as the score indicated, they were completely overwhelmed.

The line-ups were as follows:

SIX HUNDRED HEARD DR. WINTHROW AT "Y"

Film "Fit to Fight" Proves Interesting—Lecturer May Return

The special showing for McGill students of the film "Fit to Fight," last evening, took place before a large and interested audience. Dr. Winthrow, who spoke on the topic, is prominent in the medical profession, and has for the past four years been serving with our forces overseas. Going to France with the 86th Battalion, he was transferred to the Army Medical Corps, with which unit he acted in the capacity of a surgeon. For some months past he has been giving illustrated lectures on this very interesting and instructive topic, "Fit to Fight."

The special showing of the film to McGill students last evening was opened by the president of the McGill Social Service Club, who introduced the lecturer with a few well-spoken remarks. The chairman stated that as many students wished to attend the hockey match, the second part of the programme would be omitted. However, Dr. Winthrow very kindly stated that if he could be of assistance on any future occasion he would be very willing to come to speak to the students of McGill again. In consequence, it is very likely that the other film, "The Beginning of Life," will be shown in the very near future.

The large auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. was packed to the limit, when nearly six hundred men crowded in to see the picture. Besides these, there were numbers turned away from the door who were unable to produce admission tickets. The popularity of Dr. Winthrow's topics cannot be questioned, and his return visit is sure to be fully appreciated.

The meeting broke up about 9.15, amidst the usual McGill yell, followed by three hearty cheers for the lecturer. The crowd then marched down the street in a body to the Victoria Rink to cheer for the hockey team.

MCGILL HAS SWIFT TEAM FOR SATURDAY

Initial Basketball Promises to Be Fast One

TO MEET MELVILLE

Both Seniors and Intermediates Are in Good Condition—Support Them

At last after four years of practically making time, the Basketball Club has pushed itself into one of the leading clubs about the college, and is now ready to show the students some fast basketball, that has been almost dead, so far as a senior team is concerned.

To-morrow night McGill is to meet Melville in what promises to be a fast brand of basketball. There will be two fixtures, the senior and intermediates of both clubs.

McGill seniors have been working hard since the Christmas holidays, and each man is in good condition and ready to hold out to the last at all costs. Tuesday night the team showed a very marked improvement and last night all the men went through a stiff practice and took part in the necessary particulars of a finished team.

"Art" Young and George Upham will likely start off as homes. "Art" has been regularly out to practice and is in good condition. George Upham, who has been unable to attend any of the practices previous to Tuesday, was found the missing link. He possesses the steadiness that is necessary for a good team, besides his all-round experience.

Hay, a new man to McGill, who is a product of British Columbia, will start off at centre. Later he has shown marked ability at shooting and at the same time guards and plays his position well.

Montgomery and L. Kern will make up a strong defence. The former has already shown his abilities in the uniform of the Red and White. Kern though somewhat light for a senior defence position, has a good partner, and the two should pull off some first class guard work. Ross Laing will also be in uniform, and will relieve should any hitch occur.

The intermediates, under the captaincy of M. Levitt, have much good material and should give any of their opponents a hot run. Laishley and Lorne Brown are the promising forwards. Gnadinger is a steady player at centre. Levitt and Kern will make a strong defence that is hard to trick.

The freshmen in Medicine are expected to be out to this game in force, and it is expected a large percentage of the other faculties as well. There will be a small admission fee of twenty-five (25) cents charged in order that the club may come out on top at the end of its activities.

Let everybody who wishes to see some fast senior and intermediate basketball be present at the initial game of the Montreal City Basketball League to-morrow, Saturday night, at eight o'clock, at the Central Y.M.C.A. All up!!

BAR EXAMS.

At the semi-annual exam. for admission to the Junior Bar, two McGill students passed successfully. One of them, Ivan Sabourin, has the distinction of being this year the only candidate, to pass in both Letters and Science at the same sitting. Sabourin was attending Ottawa University prior to taking up his Law course at McGill this year. The other candidate, G. H. Phillimore, passed in the Letters section.

THE COMMITTEE ON MORALS AND DISCIPLINE.

In the columns of yesterday's Daily there appeared a letter in which the writer, a returned man, expressed his opinion concerning the existing Committee on Morals and Discipline. He pointed out that his letter is not directed against any individual, but is a criticism of conditions which seem incompatible with what we, as McGill students, believe to be fair play.

Such a committee does not in any way help to bridge the gap which exists between the students and the governing body. It rather tends to make more remote those conditions which would bring about perfect harmony in the university. These men, not boys, who have returned successful, victorious, in the struggle of "Democracy against Autocracy" feel that they can not tolerate anything here which might in the slightest way savour of that in the contest which many have given their lives.

The writer's suggestion that the present Committee of Morals and Discipline remain purely advisory in its nature, and that a new committee with student representation be formed, offers a very plausible solution to this problem. Representation from the senior years of the various faculties to this committee would tend to bring about an understanding between the governing and the governed, and would end that spirit of antagonism which has been rather evident in connection with the handling of the students by that committee.

Surely men of mature mind, such as are to be found in the upper years of the faculties, are fitted to aid in the maintenance of discipline among the lower years. With representation from these a committee for the purpose of seeing to the good conduct of the students would become, not a bug-bear, as has the existing committee, in the opinion of many undergraduates, but a highly respected and powerful influence in the upholding of law and order.

COLLECTORS.

I read a book the other day about a wicked millionaire. This gentleman hired minions who went about Europe stealing famous works of art for him. Of course he could not sell them again, and of course he could not show them to anyone except the minions, but he kept them in a private gallery where he could gloat upon them in secret.

I thought the whole thing was an extraordinarily stupid and clumsy performance. I am not a wicked millionaire, and I have no minions, and I do not steal. But I have a delightful private gallery, quite innocently furnished with masterpieces. As a matter of fact, every one has such a gallery, but some people keep it locked up and never go there, and others don't know of its existence. Everybody's gallery is different, because no two people admire quite the same things, and yet everyone may possess all the beautiful things which I possess. It would be interesting sometimes to compare collections and to find out how many people do possess the same masterpieces. How many people, for instance, have hanging in their private gallery the great blue and green window from Milan Cathedral? It has hung in mine ever since I saw it, twenty years ago. I had been sight-seeing for days and days and days. I had been trying to pack Venice into my head in three days—a desperate task—and I had thought myself incapable of taking a new impression. The cathedral was rather dark, and everything felt flat, and then I looked up and saw the window. It was like all the bluebells, and grass, and green trees against heavenly skies, that ever had been in the world. It was joy and spring. I took it into my gallery at once. It is a lovely thing to look at on a pouring wet day.

Every here and there in my gallery the wall is cut away so as to make a frame for the pictures which no one but nature has painted. I suppose every one has some of these pictures. Mine come from here and there all over the world. It is very exciting to get up in the morning and never know but what you may come face to face with something wonderful in the course of the day. I have one picture of black trees against a midsummer sky. Nothing moves, nothing stirs. The hills are still with an everlasting stillness. Only a little drifting mist blows slowly away, turning from gold to rose, from robe to flame, and then in a moment fading into gray.

I love that picture very much indeed. There are little things in the gallery as well as big ones. Only the other day I found a dwarf elephant and put him on an ebony stand. Somebody made him in bronze some hundreds of years ago, and he lives in the South Kensington Museum—and in my gallery. He is about five inches high, and no one could fail to love him at first sight. He is all wise wrinkles from nose to tail. His trunk asks a perpetual question.

Here, in this little case is a ring with a yellow pearl in it. Have you ever seen a yellow pearl? I have only seen this one. It is very large, and very smooth, and the yellow is just the yellow of the first spring primrose. Under the veil of primrose color is all the faint fridescence of a moon rainbow. Only a millionaire could have bought that pearl, but I may have it in my collection for nothing, and so may you, and so may every one. I wonder when we shall find out that all the beauty in the world is for every one, and that we most truly possess whatever we see and love.

DEPENDABLES AND THEIR WORK.

Dependability has won this war. Facts warrant the assertion: The great question that faces every woman to-day is: "How many dependables are there and how do I rank?" Women have been an integral part of the army and navy, and were just back of the firing line in France. The reason is because they were dependables.

Some one will say: "Oh, but I do not count! I can't do anything but knit and sew. It takes brains to be a dependable." But you are wrong as to your not counting. The war would long since have been won by Germany had there not been, right here in Canada, an immense army of dependables, stretching all the way from Labrador to Alaska, and everyone of them knitting and sewing in the way known only to dependables. That endless stream of Red Cross supplies that started as soon as the war was declared, and has never slackened, is testimony enough to the existence of dependables in Canada.

But a dependable consists in the determination to be a dependable. It was that one thing which marked the difference between Dr. Elsie Inglis, who died last November, and thousands of other women of equal ability and training. It was her dependability which caused her to accomplish a task which will forever be a high-water mark of a Scottish woman's devotion to duty and humanity. It was nothing but dependability which enabled her to lead 8,000 Serbian soldiers safely to England from Roumania by a circuitous route through Finland, because of possible ambush laid by the revolting Russians. Transportation, nursing, supplies, everything was superintended by this capable woman, and when the end was gained she paid for the success with her life.

"For every shell you fail to send over ten of us are killed," was the message from the trenches soon after the war began. Germany was sending ten shells to our one. English women read the message, and read between the lines also. They knew that, sooner or later, it would be their work, their privilege, to make those shells. Without even waiting to make sure that anyone else felt as they did about the matter they began preparing themselves to make munitions. They trained along the same lines as men. They were skilled workers when the munition factories opened their doors to women. There is the secret of the wonderful work of support and substitution carried on by the British women the world over. They trained themselves and became dependable. One million English women volunteered for munitions making, and Canada answered with her thousands

To-day in England there is almost no branch of work in which women are not employed, and in no place have they failed to make good. The quality of their work is excellent and in some cases the output has more than doubled that of men. Even quarrying and mining are open to women to-day, and in Canada the same condition would have existed, had the war continued. But everyone knows the Canadian woman is a real dependable!—The Public Health Journal.

The world, with difficulty, accustomed itself to the thought of women facing real danger and doing arduous work. Women faced it because of some loved one in the trenches, and some grave "over there." Scarcely had the army of munition workers commenced its magnificent work when another army of a quarter million organized to do whole or part time work on the land. The same spirit of dependability that guided the other women workers characterized this new body. They prepared themselves for the work in hand and resolved to "see it through." Last summer saw the beginning of a land army of women in Canada.

To-day in England there is almost no branch of work in which women are not employed, and in no place have they failed to make good. The quality of their work is excellent and in some cases the output has more than doubled that of men. Even quarrying and mining are open to women to-day, and in Canada the same condition would have existed, had the war continued. ## COWPER'S LETTERS.

"Cowper's letters, the glory of the English language, are, as models, above even Byron's," says Herbert Paul in "Men and Letters." "I do not say that they have been, or could be copied. In their apparent simplicity there is exquisite art, and their style is almost perfect. They are the joint product of the age and the man. Some men, of whom Swift was one, have an individuality too strong to be affected by their surroundings. Others, like Lord Chesterfield in his correspondence (not in his statesmanship), are mere echoes of their time. Cowper belongs to neither class. He had, of course, no sympathy with the mocking skepticism which disfigured the Eighteenth Century, and which becomes almost wearisome even in that prince of letter writers, Voltaire. Yet he was emphatically the man of the period when, as has been acutely said, the world for the first time since the days of Pliny had leisure to contemplate virtue. His humor was quite as genuine as his piety."

"Cowper was an hereditary Whig, who took the strongest interest in politics, and whose political opinion is always worth having. When Prussia and Austria declared war against France to put down the Revolution, thereby causing the September massacres, . . . and the reign of terror, Cowper protested in an admirable letter against an unjustifiable interference with the rights of the French people. Fox could not have analyzed the situation with more force and sense. Pitt would have agreed with every word, and would have continued to act upon Cowper's principles if he had cared for anything more than power. But, of course, the interest of Cowper's letters is not mainly political. . . . Women delighted in his conversation and correspondence, as he delighted in theirs. He could even, if the phrase may be used of a man, flirt, and his humor has, perhaps, been underrated because it had no sting. When Samuel Rogers was asked why he said such ill-natured things, he replied, 'I have a very low voice; and if I did not say ill-natured things, no one would hear what I said.' Cowper was never ill-natured, but the humor which produced 'John Gilpin' overflows his letters, and is one secret of their charm. He was full of affection, and he wrote to those he loved. He thought of them more than of himself, and that is a greater quality than style."

TORPEDO BOATS SAFE.

The Admiralty announces that the report which appears in certain papers that two Australian torpedo boat destroyers are missing is incorrect. Bad weather having separated the flotilla, while on passage from Gibraltar, two of the vessels put in to Vigo, and two to Ferrol for shelter. The remaining two have reached their destination.

NOTICES*Ski Run on Mountain.

There will be a ski run on Saturday afternoon, starting at 2.30 from the corner of Westmount Boulevard and Cote des Neiges. There were very few who turned out last Saturday, probably due to the weather, so, if the weather is favourable, a large attendance is requested this time, as there is also some business to be settled.

OPINION OF OTHERS.

The decision of the Maritime Provinces Intercollegiate Hockey League, with six colleges in the schedule, to operate this season is a reminder that the University of Toronto-McGill-Queen's combination made a mistake when it concluded not to play this winter. The suspension of all inter-collegiate competitions during the war was also an ill-advised action.

Athletics might have been carried on informally, at least, as in England and the United States. The schools, colleges and universities of these countries preserved the continuity of their athletic records, raised large sums for patriotic purposes, and at the same time enabled the students not in khaki to derive the various benefits which accrue. Education is incomplete when the physical aspect is neglected.—Toronto Globe.

BOLSHEVISTS BUSY.

The Copenhagen authorities are busily engaged in tracking the Bolshevik agents, who for some time past have been working among many war prisoners passing through Copenhagen from Germany. The Danish authorities are determined to put a stop to the activities of these men, who make the acquaintance of soldiers and then endeavor to win them over to Bolshevik ideas.

DONALDAS PRESENT

Capt. Carpenter, V.C., Gave Graphic Account of Fighting on Hun Base

University undergraduates have seldom the opportunity of seeing a hero, or of hearing in the words of a living man the true story of deeds of valour for which the highest national honours are given. About five hundred of McGill's undergrads took the rare opportunity yesterday of hearing Captain Carpenter, V.C., speak on the British naval raid on Zeebrugge, in which action he earned the nation's highest naval honour. In chosen and sincere words the Captain quietly told of this most remarkable feat, and stirred the deepest feelings of patriotism in his hearers by his graphic picture of a modern naval battle.

In setting the stage for the great drama the speaker carefully reviewed the geographical considerations, and gave much new and interesting information regarding relative strengths of British and German naval guns, mined areas and submarine bases.

The object of the action was to stop the submarine activity of the port of Bruges, and the way selected for doing this was the blockading of the sea end of the Zeebrugge canal, the only practical communication between Bruges and the North Sea. By the whole world this blockade was considered impossible. The artificial harbour was armed with Germany's greatest defence guns, manned by thousands of men, the most important battery of three biggest guns being trained on the narrow harbour opening.

To block the canal then, three things were necessary, namely, putting this main battery out of action; keeping it out of action by cutting off reinforcements; and finally, sinking vessels in the narrowest part of the shallow canal mouth.

History has recorded the gallant and victorious way in which the navy attempted and accomplished this impossible task. We know of the fight of the Vindictive, who steamed through her smoke screen to within "biscuit" range of the defending battery, fought her way to the shelter of the mole, landed her brave fighters in the heart of a German fortress, and clung to the sea-wall with full protected and superstructure swept by a devastating barrage. We have heard also of the six Britishers who boldly moored their submarine (with five tons of explosives with time fuse) under the railroad leading to the mole, and rowed out into the darkness of the North Sea under point-blank fire, hoping to meet a vessel which had left Dover eight hours before for the purpose of picking them up. We also know the facts of the audacious act of the sinking of the blockading vessels in the vital part of the channel, and the dramatic rescue of the crews, but the clear voice of the speaker, and his frank statements of facts brought home to the audience the true reality, thrill, danger and glory of the whole action. "We did not go to Zeebrugge to make a new naval tradition, or do a stunt. We went there to knock out three guns in twenty minutes, and we did it."

The action was won, not by ships and guns, but by men, and by that great spirit of the British Navy, which recognizes service as the only acceptable aspiration of a man, and demands complete mutual sympathy between leaders and men. The Navy is mighty because the men know and obey the officers, and the officers protect and love their men. Until our social system accepts this rule of conduct we cannot hope to equal the great standards held up for us by an army and navy.

CHOPIN'S GENIUS.

Chopin was born in Poland of French parents, but received part of his education in Germany. The influence of the three nationalities affect his personality to an extent that is very remarkable. He has in short, appropriated the best characteristics of each: Poland has bequeathed to him chivalrous tendencies, her historical sorrows; France, her delicate grace, her charm; Germany, her profound romanticism. For the rest, nature has given him... a noble heart, and genius. Yes, genius, in the full acceptance of the term, must be allowed to Chopin. He is not virtuosos only, he is also a poet, he can make us apprehend the poetry which lives in his heart, he is a "tone-poet" and no enjoyment is equal to that which he bestows upon

R. V. C. NOTES*College Spirit.

A great deal has been said of late in both the editorial and correspondence columns of the Daily on College Spirit. Apparently, a few words on that subject would not be out of place for the R.V.C. students.

On Wednesday, at the Freshman-Sophomore debate, the Common Room was filled almost entirely by members of those two years. Four Juniors and three Seniors formed the entire representation of the upper classmen. Decidedly, this is not showing College Spirit. Naturally, neither the subject of debate nor the actual contest was of immediate interest to the upper years, but it is not part of one's duty to see that the meetings of our college societies are well attended?

That we have College Spirit, we have shown in the past. The hearty support given to the Basketball Teams when playing at Macdonald, and the splendid interest displayed in the Delta Sigma debate with the Literary Society were most gratifying. But do not let us fall from this standard. This year, especially, when all athletic enterprises have been checked by the influenza, it is of pre-eminent importance that we stand by our other college societies. Mere book-learning will never be a satisfactory result of a university training; of equal if not greater importance is the experience gained in the varied activities of our undergraduate societies. These are four in number—the Athletic Society, the Delta Sigma, the Y. W. C. A., and the Societe Francaise, and each is dealing with problems which directly affect student interests. It is little encouragement either to the officers who have arranged the programme, or to the students who are providing it, if the attendance of the members does not show a hearty co-operation.

Athletic Executive.

Don't forget that the photograph of the Senior Basketball Team and of the Executive of the Athletic Society is to be taken at two o'clock to-day. The Basketball Team should be in gym suits, including hair bands and running shoes. The members of the Senior Team are as follows: E. Ross, J. Spier, G. Craig, G. Moody, R. Salmon, Q. Savage and R. Rogers.

NAVAL ART EXHIBITION

The Sea Power Exhibition at the Grosvenor Galleries has had certainly the charm of variety. This remarkable collection of objects, all of which have some measure of historical interest—relics worthy of permanent preservation as mementos of many stirring episodes in the war—provides a pictorial commentary, compiled by a number of distinguished artists, on the silent activities of the navy during four strenuous years. The relics, naturally, cannot be discussed from any artistic standpoint; their destination is the museum, not the art gallery, and their appeal is not to the aesthetic sense but to the popular craving for the "real thing." They make, really, a rather odd gathering of incoherently assorted things, but each one is a reminder of some happening which deserves to be recorded in the history of the war, and each one has some power to stir the imagination.

The pictures and drawings, on the other hand, do appeal in the strongest possible way to the aesthetic emotion, because they visualize effectively facts and occurrences which have a vital interest for all sorts of people, and put into pictorial form the war events about which so much, or so little, has been read. These paintings, indeed, show not only the more obvious doings of the navy, but some of its secrets as well, and show them in a way that is artistically satisfying. The official artists are all men of marked capacity, and their productions are as acceptable for their technical merit as their subject matter.

conspicuous success is Sir John Lavery. The series of canvases by which he is represented—the series which, with the most commendable public spirit, he has presented to the Imperial War Museum—is notable for its sustained excellence of accomplishment, and includes some of the best open-air studies he has ever painted. There is an admirably fresh directness of statement in them all, and in many there is a singular charm of atmospheric quality. The snowy landscapes, "Long Hope, 1917," and "Scapa Flow, 1916," are particularly notable; and the night scene, "Arrival of the German Delegates, H.M.S. Queen Elizabeth, Nov. 15, 1918," is rarely impressive and dramatically suggestive. He has added to the series a few portraits of naval men, which show more than his ordinary grasp of character and vigor of handling.

Mr. Philip Connard is not so markedly happy in his treatment of war subjects; his pictures are luminous and vivacious and not lacking in character, but he has fallen too often into a convention which makes his paintings of the sea a little empty and unconvincing. Mr. McEvoy, too, has lost some of his power of presentment and some of his technical effectiveness, and, as a consequence, the portraits he shows look rather tentative and wanting in conviction. Mr. Glyn Philpot's portraits of Lord Jellicoe, Sir Reginald Tyrwhitt, Sir Roger Keyes, and Sir Doveton Sturdee, are interesting character studies painted with freedom and masculine decision, but they are not the best he can do. However, these three artists, even if they have fallen short, have certainly produced work which is a great advance on the type of picture which in past years was considered good enough for official purposes—they are decidedly not commonplace.

International Referendum to Be Conducted on This Question by Commerce Chambers Congress

At the moment the great war was thrust upon the world, substantial progress was being made toward increasing the effectiveness of the international Congress of Chambers of Commerce by the establishment at Brussels, Belgium, of a permanent bureau. The pooling of the nation's resources into the European conflict necessitated a suspension of the activities of this congress, which first assembled in Liege, Belgium, in 1905, but now business men are anticipating a resumption of its programme, feeling that the organization has an important place to fill in the new economic relationship of the several countries.

Six meetings of this congress have been held, as follows: Liege 1905, Milan 1906, Prague 1908, London 1910, Boston 1912 and Paris 1914. Active participation in the proceedings was taken by representatives of the governments of the various countries where the congress has met, as well as by delegations from a great many nations around the world.

The first international referendum ever undertaken was about to be submitted at the outbreak of the war. The International Congress of Chambers of Commerce had already voted to conduct such a referendum on the question of disloyal, or unfair, international business competition among concerns in the various nations. The purpose of this referendum was to obtain the consensus of opinion of each country on this vital subject, so that the congress could recommend new laws, or revision of existing laws, looking toward the correction of unfair competition, thus taking an important step toward removing an element making, at times, for inharmonious feeling between business men of different countries. Out of this referendum was to be developed a standard law to be recommended for enactment in the various countries.

The international organization is composed of the larger chambers of commerce and business organizations in all the important countries. How extensive it is may be shown by the fact that the Boston meeting in 1912 was attended by 535 delegates from other countries, according to Edward A. Filene, who, as vice-president of the congress for America, was instrumental in bringing the 1912 meeting to the United States.

many engagements as possible on her list, and says that she will keep them if she can possibly get them in. To allocate and fix plans in advance is often impossible, because the Queen always endeavours to leave a certain amount of time free for joint engagements with the King.

The correspondence and engagement list done with the Queen gives the rest of the morning to private interviews and work that can be done within the palace. Her desire to know of women's work at first hand has led her to interview the heads of women's organizations all over the kingdom. Thus she learned the details of the Land Army scheme from Miss Talbot, of the Employment Exchanges from Miss Durham, of Public Health work for women from Miss Anderson, to mention only some of the people who have been summoned to Buckingham Palace.

Last month the Queen was kept very busy with Christmas presents. Several hundred personal gifts had been sent to institutions and charities besides friends. Everyone who received a gift or a card may be assured that it had been chosen by Her Majesty. She knows personally everyone she sends to, and keeps in mind old friends of her mother, and charities with which she has been connected for many years.

In Touch With the Nation.

Luncheon at Buckingham Palace is an informal occasion, when Their Majesties are able to receive many interesting people privately and so keep in touch with the public and private life of the nation.

The afternoon is spent according to pre-arranged plans generally told in the Court Circular. When the King is away it is easier for the Queen to follow her own plans. For instance, she wished recently to meet some returned prisoners of war and kept two days quite free to do so whenever they arrived. She has also been shopping lately at certain big stores and libraries, and has thoroughly enjoyed it. The Queen is usually recognized at once, but consideration is shown for her wish to remain incognito.

In the evening Her Majesty writes to her children, now very scattered, and to other members of the family. She reads the evening newspapers and as many books as she can find time for, while a scarf for a soldier or sailor or some useful piece of crochet is usually near at hand.—London Daily Mail.

INCONGRUOUS.

A flower garden in Spitzbergen sounds like an anomaly, Spitzbergen being within the Arctic Circle. A party of British travellers, struck with the beauty of a plateau, called it the Flower Garden ever after. It was in the nineties of last century, and the party that of Sir Martin Conway. Landing, in midsummer, on one of the headlands by Dickson Bay, they were impressed with the deep water clear as crystal, the marvelous wealth of seaweed, the splendor of a great glacier, and the sharp blue peaks of the mountains separating glacier from glacier; while in another direction, over Advent Point, coiled wreaths of ragged clouds. Added to it all was a carpet of flowers; andromeda, saxifrages, and dryas; so the Flower Garden was actual after all.

BRITAIN'S PURCHASES.

The Canada Food Board in a statement says: "Nearly 250,000 tons of meats, dairy produce and eggs have been purchased by the British Ministry of Food in Canada up to the end of 1915. The exact total is 486,150,000 pounds. The Provisions Section purchased directly 153,453 tons, made up of 86,438 tons' butter and ham, 420 tons lard, 222 tons butter, 1,674 tons milk, 4,535 tons preserved meat, 60,164 tons frozen meat. In addition to this the Dairy Produce Commission, on behalf of the British ministry, purchased 80,622 tons of food, made up of 65,955 tons cheese, 3,988 tons butter, 19,334 tons milk, 345 tons eggs, a combined total of 234,075 tons.

CANADA AS SHIP-BUILDER.

According to Capt. Paul de Chippel, representative of several Belgian firms, who was a recent visitor to Ottawa, these firms have given orders to Canadian shipbuilders for the construction of some 20 wooden ships, each of 2,000 to 3,000 tons capacity. Orders for steel vessels of larger build will follow, he says. In the course of an interview, the Belgian officer, who until recently was in the employ of the British transport service, said that the great requirement of his country for some years to come would be chiefly foodstuffs and raw materials.

THE QUEEN'S DAY A HARD ONE

The Queen, who has quietly and modestly led the women of the Empire in their war work, has ever been one of the hardest working women in the kingdom.

To hear the story of an ordinary day in her life is to hear of no wasted moment. The Queen works for the nation, and her one thought is to make right decisions. She has so planned that she has kept intimately in touch with all women workers and has ruled her time in order to have freedom to take an active part in their work. Her Majesty brings great method to her complex duties, and those who work under her feel inspired by her practical handling of difficulties.

The Royal Family when in London breakfast together at 9 o'clock, the meal being a very informal and quick one. The work of the day then begins. Her Majesty reads morning papers and goes through her post-bag, marking those letters which she intends to hand over to her private secretary or to her lady to deal with. The Queen opens and reads all the letters addressed to her personally, those addressed to her lady-in-waiting or to her secretary are brought to her about 10 o'clock, when she attends to them in detail.

Her Majesty is insistent that she should know all that the people wish brought before her, and dislikes to think that anything should be kept from her. She is sensitive to the requests and desires of her correspondents, and willingly considers helpful suggestions. As telegrams and messages which come for the Queen during the morning are delivered immediately, she often breaks off other work to send congratulations or condolences, to give instructions as to flowers and messages, and to decide who shall represent her on various occasions.

Planning for the Future.

Not the least difficult of the morning duties is that of making decisions and of planning various engagements for dates far in advance. Her Majesty accedes to one-tenth of the requests made to her, but she puts as
